

Mergent Enhances Mergent Online with ETF Data from XTF

September 14, 2017, Fort Mill, SC - The latest enhancement to Mergent's products is the introduction of Exchange Traded Fund (ETF) data from XTF into Mergent Online. The addition of ETF data will provide users with financial information on the ETF market which was not previously covered by Mergent Online.

Similar to Mergent, XTF is a company that is now a part of London Stock Exchange Group's Information Services Division. XTF delivers a comprehensive suite of reference and analytics data across ETFs to help investors, students, and patrons research and evaluate the multi-asset class ETF market. Currently, XTF covers 100% of the US ETF market, which is over 1,800 ETFs, and is currently expanding its coverage into Europe and Asia. XTF's data goes back over 15 years with fund level data as far back as 2001 and portfolio holding data as far back as 2007. XTF's robust analytics provide ratings for ETFs and allow users to classify ETFs by geography, asset/sector objective, investment philosophy, and index composition. The three main uses of XTF, by investors, patrons and students alike, are to inform investment decisions, conduct industry and product analysis, and build research and portfolio tools.

Additionally, within this new release of Mergent Online, we have also expanded company news by using FirstRain Analytics. FirstRain's patented algorithms comb the global web and social media in real time, and highlight the most relevant content. This keeps the Mergent Company Briefs fresh and up-to-date, delivering users real-time insights without any extensive research on their part.
